

An Intimate Escape

► Cynthia Ferranto of Cynthia Ferranto Landscape Design was charged with revitalizing the entry terrace and sunken garden on the west side of the home (right). After turning on a newly installed fountain in the sunken garden, she says, “the history of the house came back to life.” She replaced a brick pathway with a narrower pea-gravel path, creating space for plantings and imparting a fresh new look. A pair of weeping cherry trees transplanted from the front garden brings color to the intimate space while a new cast-stone urn (above) offers a focal point.
